Cases of burning eye syndrome in Arctic foxes (Alopex lagopus) during the arctic winter. Six cases of burning eye syndrome (BES) have been observed in arctic foxes in the Leningrad Region in the years 1975-1992. Fifty per cent of the affected foxes, three females and three males of the European subspecies (Alopex lagopus lagopus) and one female and one male of the Siberian subspecies (Alopex lagopus lagopus) suffered from BES during the winter months of February to April. In the affected foxes, the external eyelids were red and sometimes filled with serous fluid; the eyes were penetrated by transudate containing inflammatory cells and bacteria, and all eye structures contained abundant serous fluid, watery exudate and fibrin. The more affected foxes of each family showed the same clinical picture; all affected foxes were small-sized. The symptoms of BES appeared in the thaw of ice from the frozen surface of the soil and the eyes of the affected foxes remained open. It was concluded that the clinical picture of BES was similar to that of uveitis induced by exposure to fine sand (Cocchi-Ferraris disease) and that the cause of BES was probably similar to that of this disease. Earlier this week Trump announced a 20 percent tariff on imported steel and a 25 percent tariff on imported aluminum from the EU. on a single dab of this Californian-based brand."As the hidden costs of production are removed from the final price of a dab of cannabis, alongside the increased options and opportunities that exist for consumers and local economies, the cost per ounce of the high quality dabs worldwide is expected to greatly decrease." By more closely tracking the growth rate of companies, firms, and neighborhoods that excel at producing high quality dabs, UrbStoner has identified a number of trends that are clearly evident. What we see is a vast decrease in the cost of everything from buds to oils, a rise in supply, and an influx of innovative and creative masters of dab production that are making headway internationally. So in a short while we can expect a vast reduction in the cost of dabs, which will in turn drive up demand, drive up prices, and enable the market to flourish."Sharing the great latest about what some of the big players are up to, UrbStoner says that several new local brands are now on the rise, but they like to live at the top of the pyramid...We can see the most expansive brands beginning to feed more heavily into the hands of smaller, better quality dabbers. Brands that embrace customer satisfaction and interactive marketing, are more willing to work with smaller, smaller-scale dabbers, and deliver things on time and with a high-quality product. These are the types of dabs and companies we expect to see succeeding over the coming months and years." While interest in dabbing is rising, UrbStoner predicts that October will yet again be a landmark month, with 27,000 kilograms of cannabis being processed for the first time in a number of years during that month. He also says that just as the evolution of music led to another major innovation — namely the double album, UrbStoner believes there will be similar shifts in dabbing. It would seem that in January 2020 the people are more likely to be waiting for the exceptional dabs than buying them, and in April the urgency should be at a higher level.Boom Markets, UrbStoner's, UK-based portfolio manager, has been involved in banking and finance for 16 years, and he says that: "The names of the game come down to value (and short-term profits); for dabbling it looks more like a long game. With such an abrupt dive in cost of dabbling, I believe that the mainstream market will seek to disentangle itself away from the more

Imagine if you were having a bad dream, and you need to escape. Do you try waking up? No, you just continue with your bad dream. Imagine you are on an island, and you need to leave. Do you try to swim, because even if you knew how to swim, a surf would still knock you right out of the water. You see, you can't escape the island, you just continue dreaming. This is our story: I'm on a boat. The boat is sinking. We are all tired of our own lives. There is no way out, and there is no way to save ourselves. It is day; it is night; and there is no light on the island. We are looking for any way to escape and to survive. The land is gone. It would be boring if the same old system is used again and again on our favorite game genre, which is indie development. I have spent a lot of time on this project. The resources that I have spent are all mine. The image it took, and the animation that have been realized, are my creation. If you enjoyed this project, please help me give support by sharing it!
