The South African History School Cluster (SAHSC) had filed a complaint against the CAT, alleging that the competition tribunal had not acted in accordance with the Constitution, laws and regulations when it dismissed the CPSA's appeal on the accreditation of schools by the Department of Basic Education. As such, the SAHSC recommended that its members be able to apply for financial support from the Department of Education for their accreditation to become an Independent Institution. The CAT would not order the department to pay for accreditation of schools but instead they requested submissions on how the matter should be dealt with. The CAT ultimately dismissed the appeal as they considered it to be a suitable matter for a decision by them. "Accordingly, the appeal is dismissed as no order is made in terms of section 52(5)(a)." The Department of Education explained that it has no mandate to pay for accreditation for private schools. "It would be wholly inappropriate and unlawful for the Department of Education, the Department of Basic Education or the Council to enter into a partnership with, or make payment towards the accreditation of schools based on the Charter Schools Act, 2007, (Act No. 53 of 2007), otherwise known as the Charter Schools Act or the Charter Schools Management Act (Act No. 10 of 2010)," it said. Section 5(3) of the Charter Schools Act of 2007 stated that the Departments of Education and Basic Education did not have any financial responsibility to seek or provide accreditation for schools who are certified or otherwise registered. of a life well lived If, as E.B. White once wrote, “The queer undramatic world of Marble Fauns and lamps has crowded my head and woven itself into my desires,” then I will agree with Kate Davis-Kehoe that her work “creates great narratives rooted in specificity and delight” (E.P. Inman, “News: Martha Madison”). Photo by Bob Fisher Martha Madison is a writer, consultant and teacher, who has practiced her art with and for people her entire life. Her works, which she describes as “rocks,” include three graphic memoirs and a groundbreaking education platform called Progressive Acceptance. This month, I had the great honor to speak with Martha about her process, success and what works for her when it comes to education and publishing. After having been a student and teacher her entire life — as a Renaissance scholar, a creative writing professor, and someone who has spent decades reading children’s books — Martha brings together all the elements she uses to create hopefulness and possibility in her work. I first connected with Martha a few years back while working on my novel, The Apartments of Doubt, at the Eugene O’Neill Theatre Center. I’m not a playwright, and even though I knew that I would find a wonderful writing mentor at the Center, I wasn’t sure how much I could find myself learning at a theater. That all changed when I met Martha and started to do the work of the Center. She took me on as a student, with whom she wrote and rewrote my first plays. She found me a manager to run the House. She encouraged me to try out other venues and, after just one play, she read that I’d opened at the Magic Theatre in New York City. I also had the opportunity to attend her writing camp for teenagers, which gave me the guidance and support I needed to finish my first novel. Later she supported me with publicity, press and author tours as I worked on the book. It was a relationship that didn't feel transactional, but about supporting a young writer's dream. Martha has had a professional, personal and notable influence on my own work as well. Her dedication to educating her students has infused her into my home life, and I don't think that would be possible without her. She has become a close friend who continues to mentor me as I

Q: Any productivity software to work more efficiently with multimedia, data & math? Have you guys used any software/app specifically to help with school work (mainly math and science)? I have a really hard time understanding the basics of math, and I think my mental illness has gotten worse. I'm trying to learn a better way to study & understnad the material. I'm looking for something that will automate my learning and help a little with mental health. A: I'm going to preface my answer with a few caveats: I have never seen the "retaining tax" that other people talk about and haven't done much math with textbooks. I've had several years of teaching math to 15 year olds in public school. My goal with teaching math was to make sure they didn't have such a hard time with it that they'd drop out, rather than to try to improve their understanding of math. That being said, there are some things that certain students need to know (certain concepts). It's possible that grouping these things into a coherent curriculum might help them. If there's some underlying characteristic to your mental illness which makes you unable to understand math, perhaps asking your teachers to break things down into increments that are a little bit easier won't have the downside that it might with someone else. If for some reason you get discouraged from learning, I'd recommend talking to your teacher about what kinds of assignments and projects or homework would interest you. If there are certain types of assignments she can make and return in chunks that might be helpful. If you disagree with these, you might explore whether or not they're reasonable to learn from just about at an easy enough pace without getting discouraged, then discuss with your teacher how to best break down your work. Anyway, I can provide some links to various math instructional
